Abstract

The collection contains a 48 minute videotape of Admiral Beverly Coleman giving a lecture and answering questions on his grandfather Col. John Singleton Mosby (1833-1916), a Confederate partisan commander, born in Powhatan County, Virginia. Another educator provides some information and answers. Mosby was an irregular cavalry officer, and he participated in several prominent battles and famously led a significant partisan campaign in Northern Virginia throughout the Civil War. After the war, he held local and federal government positions.

Biographical Note

Born in 1899, Rear Admiral Beverly Coleman is the grandson of Col. John S. Mosby, a famous Confederate partisan commander. Coleman is a 1922 graduate of the United States Naval Academy, and served in the United States Naval Reserves. He served in the Second World War, and was the Chief Defense Counsel for the International Military Tribunal for the Far East, which tried Japanese political and military leaders for their role in the war. Additionally, he served as the secretary for the United Nations brokered armistice conference between North and South Korea in 1953. He married and had two children. Coleman died in 1993.

John Singleton Mosby (1833-1916) was born in Powhatan County, Virginia. Having already established a thriving legal practice and with a wife and children, Mosby joined Confederate forces with the outbreak of the Civil War in Virginia. Eventually coming under the command of famous cavalry commander J.E.B. Stuart. Noted for his ability as a cavalry raider and scout, Mosby was given permission to form a cavalry partisan unit in late 1862. His "43rd Battalion, Virginia Cavalry," proved a significant hindrance to Federal operations in the northern Shenandoah Valley and Northern Virginia, raiding and ambushing supply lines. He surrendered his command on June 17, 1865, months after Lee's surrender at Appomattox. Following the war however, Mosby engaged in reconciliatory politics. He resumed his law practice, but also served in several local and federal positions, including Consul to Hong Kong. His contributions to Civil War history include Mosby's War Reminiscences and Stuart's Cavalry Campaigns (1887).
