Biographical Note

Kendall Weisiger was born on February 14, 1880, to Samuel C. and Bettie C. Weisiger. He attended Virginia Polytechnic Institute from 1896 to 1900, graduating with a degree in Electrical Engineering. In 1933, Weisiger served as the VPI commencement speaker. He was then the assistant to the president of Southern Bell Telephone. By 1941, when Weisiger spoke at commencement again, he was the vice president of American Telephone and Telegraph. He died in Georgia on September 18, 1960.

Scope and Content

The collection contains an excerpt from a speech given by Kendall Weisiger to the faculty at the University of Georgia, c. 1930s. Weisiger calls on faculty to eliminate the "non-essentials" from college education "so as to make room for content that would better equip the students to meet the needs of war, should they be called into its participation."
