Historical and Biographical Information

In the mid-1950s, Mary K. McCulloch, Director of Fairfax County Public Library (FCPL), established the Virginia Collection. Ever since then, individuals, authors, private organizations, and public agencies have donated photographs, negatives, slides, postcards, and copies of prints to what is now known as the Virginia Room located in the City of Fairfax Regional Library. The photographic archive grew after 1965 with the establishment of the Fairfax County Historical Landmarks Preservation Commission (later renamed the Fairfax County History Commission) when they continuously donated hundreds of images. The now defunct History Program of the Fairfax County Office of Comprehensive Planning also contributed photographs from their inventory of historic sites and preservation programs.

By the late 1970s, the number of images in the photographic archive reached into the thousands, making retrieval extremely difficult. In response to this problem, the Fairfax County History Commission funded a project of organizing, inventorying, and classifying the collection. Upon completion in 1981, the History Commission published the book Catalog of the Photographic Archive of Fairfax County, Virginia.

At the time, the archive's slide collection consisted of approximately 1,500 35- millimeter color and black and white slides. Virginia Room librarian Karen Ann Moore compiled an index of the slide collection for the History Commission's published catalog, however it remained incomplete until the creation of this finding aid in 2021. There are 2,660 slides in this collection which depict historic buildings, documents, events, and many other visual aspects of the county's history.
