Administrative History

The Art Department in 1970 was based in the Duke Fine Arts Center, which was built in 1967 to house the Art, Theater and Music departments. Due to space constraints, art studios were also located in various spaces around campus: printmaking in the basement of Converse Hall, painting and drawing in a former woman's gymnasium located in Ashby Hall; sculpture and three-dimensional design in the basement garages at the rear of Harrison Hall. When the school of Music moved to a new facility in 1989, the Art Department occupied more of Duke Hall. Duke Hall housed the Sawhill Gallery, which is currently located on the fourth floor of Warren Hall. Zirkle House, which was demolished in 2006, also housed an art gallery.

In the 1970s, the Art Department was under the Division of the Humanities. The department was reorganized in 1996 as the Department of Art and Art History, and was incorporated into the College of Arts and Letters.

Scope and Content

The collection is comprised of photographs of faculty, students and events related to the Art and Art History Art department, from 1970-2000.

It contains images of Ashby Hall, the Zirkle House Studio, the print shop in the basement of Converse, the slide room, and images of the Sawhill Collection (1:6).
